

DR. JOHN W. O'BRIEN, RECTOR'S ADDRESS

CONCORDIA BEGINS

Concordia University has become a legal reality; Sir George Williams and Loyola of Montreal have now formally merged their separate identities to create this new university.

Legal union is the culmination of many months of exploration, negotiation and, at times, heated debate. Such debate will surely continue. When you join together two lively institutions, each with its own philosophies and ways of doing things, each firmly dedicated to freedom of thought and speech, you must expect a measure of friction. In this way new approaches and attitudes are developed even as viable traditions are affirmed. We look forward now to a new period of creative friction.

Society's own requirements of higher education are, themselves, in a state of flux. There is a legitimate seeking for more relevant, more responsive programs. But innovation must not imply a sacrifice of academic quality. For a university, the integrity of the degrees awarded remains vital.

There is also clear need today for a new look at the timing of education, which has ceased to be a single period that is closed off at a predetermined age. There must be opportunities to leave and to return, to renew as well as to continue. Flexibility in this regard will be a priority concern for Concordia University.

The University will have some 25,000 students on its two campuses—full-time and part-time, graduate and undergraduate, building careers and seeking self-fulfilment. Unity of purpose does not preclude a healthy rivalry in the service of those students, the success of the parts furnishing the greater success of the whole.

There is more to a university than classrooms, libraries and laboratories. We have to ensure that Concordia in its totality fashions good memories for its alumni-to-be.

Concordia inherits the responsibilities to the community of its two founding institutions; we must also provide an imaginative response to the developing needs of that community. We can then look confidently to the community and to the government of the province for support and understanding.

CONTINUING EDUCATION GROWS

Loyola's Centre for Continuing Education, designed to encourage Montrealers to return to academic study or acquire new practical, technical or recreational skills, was founded a year ago. The courses are non-credit and require no previous academic record or experience.

Besides academic programs, the 1974 fall and winter session offers contemporary study courses, craft courses, and practical courses. These range from lectures on Current Issues and the Reality of Death, to Batik, Painting, Basic Sewing and Career Planning.

Four certificate programs will be introduced this fall in Commercial Art, Journalism, French Conversation, and Fashion (dress designing and pattern-making). These programs involve six or seven courses of 12 sessions each.

The Commercial Art program is made up of drawing and design courses with additional lectures on film, video and typography. The certificate program in Journalism provides practical information for those interested

McCallum Resigns

The Loyola Alumni Association started in early 1900's as an "old boys" club. The Association got its greatest impetus in the '60's with the enormous increase in student enrollment and today has a membership of over 10,000 with a branch in Toronto.

umni Affairs since 1966, who recently resigned as liaison officer between the Loyola administration and the graduates, is responsible for many innovations within the Association.

In his term of office McCallum has seen many changes, some difficult for older alumni. "The older graduates remember Loyola as a small classical college", says McCallum. "But Loyola has been altered so radically in recent years with the introduction of co-education, and the break with the Jesuit tradition, that younger alumni cannot share their nostalgia and sense of commitment. Recent graduates were at Loyola during the time of student unrest, shifts in policy and changes in curriculum content. Their concept of what Loyola is and should be is completely different."

Questioned about the future of alumni groups and about the Loyola Association in particular, McCallum says that he feels today's graduates are no longer interested in a formal association although they like to get together socially. The prospective union with Sir George will also necessitate some readjustments within Loyola's Association, he said.

In addition to his job as intermediary and spokesman for the college's viewpoint, McCallum handled fund raising, development and public relations for the Alumni. He helped set up the Bridges and Steppingstones programs to familiarize undergraduate and high school students with the business world.

Bernard McCallum first came to Loyola as a high school student in 1935. After high school he continued on at Loyola College. His education was interrupted when in 1942 he joined the Armed Forces. After the war, McCallum continued his studies graduating in Arts from the University of Ottawa. In 1950 McCallum began working at the High School as a teacher of mathematics until he assumed the directorship of Alumni Affairs.

Bernie is well-known in Montreal for his outstanding sports achievements both as a player and as a coach. In hockey as an all-star defenceman, McCallum won three Most Valuable Player awards at Loyola. His career began with bantam and junior high school teams and continued in collegial, armed service and senior leagues. As a coach he led eight Loyola teams to intercollegiate hockey titles.

McCallum's baseball and football careers are equally impressive and extensive. In 1946 he turned down a professional contract to pursue his university studies. Because of his athletic reputation, McCallum has made numerous contacts in the sports media which he has used over the years to help raise funds for Association activities. In 1967 McCallum was named a charter member of the Loyola Sports Hall of Fame.

When speaking about Bernard McCallum's contribution to the Loyola community, Father Patrick G. Malone, S.J., said: "Bernie has been a member of the Loyola family for a long time. Most recently in the post of Director of Alumni Affairs, he was always eager to keep ahead of national developments in alumni relations, and established a recognizable expertise in the field".

Ron Boucher, President of the Association also commented on McCallum's affiliation with the alumni saying, "Because of Bernie's contribution to the Loyola Alumni Association, we will be able to continue and grow".

in newspapers or a career in journalism, and offers courses in reporting, editorial and feature writing, and an examination of the role of the press in society.

Among the topical courses, Current Issues and Moral Issues are concerned with existing problems. Current Issues is a series of five independent lectures being discussed in Quebec, Canada and in the world. Experts will deal with several questions, among them confessional schools, are they outdated? and Montreal development, should it be free or controlled? Moral Issues looks at morality from two points of view — Is there a morality crisis? and Why? Discussions include the law and morality, morality in advertising, marriage and the family, and responsibility and conscience.

Registration is in progress for all 38 courses and can be done in person or by mail. The Centre is located at 7270 Sherbrooke St. W. For additional information, call 482-0320, local 708.

June & July Directors' Meetings

EXECUTIVE NEWS

GENERAL BUSINESS

Each member of the Executive will have a specific responsibility and will be aided by one or more Directors in the planning and supervision of the Association's activities.

Alumni Special Fund Tickets are now on sale and Ron Boucher hopes income from the sale of tickets will help finance the year's events.

Richard Stock is organizing the Class Agents System to improve communications among Alumni.

The President is looking for interesting copy for the Newsletter from Alumni. This means notes of general interest, letters to the editor (we need opinions), and articles on prominent graduates.

SOCIAL

Alumni Golf Tournament, Monday, September 9 with a shot-gun start at 1 p.m. — Royal Montreal Golf Club, Ile Bizard.

Oyster Party, Friday night, October 25 — Hingston Hall, Loyola Campus. Chairman is Dick Riendeau.

Jim Quinlan and Christina Murphy are co-ordinating a Wine and Cheese Party featuring a Fashion Show at the Loyola Campus Centre. Date to be announced.

ATHLETIC

Warriors' Club begins its third year with programs for men and women. Teams will be made up of hockey, football, basketball and badminton.

EDUCATIONAL

Steppingstones will again take place at Loyola (businessmen and professionals discuss careers with high school students). Speakers are being recruited by Frank McNally and committee. Plans are being made to extend the program to other high schools.

Irwin Katsof and the Alumni Board are lining up last year University students, businessmen and professionals to take part in the Bridges series. The program is designed to promote understanding between students and businessmen.

The Student Loan Fund will be operating again with the same format as in previous years. Loans are granted at the beginning of the second term but interested students should apply to the Financial Aid office early in the first semester.
